Abstract

The study examines the theories of economic growth after analyzing the concepts of development, economic growth and labor, respectively. The concept of "labor", which constitutes the development criteria and the core of the worker; It is discussed as "labor equality" and how the labor force needs or changes in the following period. The purpose of the study is to show why and how the resulting paradigm shift has developed in the problem of production and distribution, looking at the development criteria being evolved into new meanings in the process; Unlike the patriarchal system; If we were to discover the other distinction that we do not yet have a clear understanding of how it would be, we should put forth the concept of "labor equality". In this work, analytic philosophy has been studied in accordance with the conceptual analysis. It is expected that the work, the theory of labor, will contribute to the theoretical infrastructure of development. Key words: Development, governance, industrial revolution, labor equality
